

Governator kick starts demolition project...

Schwarzenegger leads demolition ceremony at beginning of hospital construction.

There was a time, during his movie career, when demolition work was carried out strictly by hand, often taking in people as well as buildings. But time marches on and Arnold Schwarzenegger, now Governor of California, now prefers to let other people and some heavy equipment take care of such matters as you can see below as Gov. Schwarzenegger participates in a demolition ceremony to make way for the construction of March Memorial Hospital, part of the March LifeCare project.

March LifeCare is a 557,400 square metre (6 million square foot), 95 hectare (236-acre) project being developed on surplus land of the former March Air Force Base. The project will include a hospital, medical office buildings, skilled nursing and ambulatory care facilities, wellness centers and other facilities. The project is expected to create 12,700 construction jobs and 7,200 full-time health care and other related jobs.
